

RESIDENCE*Corner Botherambo Street and Tanner Street*History and Description

This Victorian residential building was probably constructed in c. 1860. No evidence has been found to establish the actual construction date of the building. It is constructed to a rectangular plan, and is symmetrically proportioned with a central entrance flanked by windows. A verandah relieves the building at ground level and extends to the property line. Simple window treatments, gable pitched roof, and chimney decoration is indicative of its 1860's construction date.

Statement of Significance

This Victorian residence is prominently located and is an important survivor of this early settled area of Richmond.
